understanding future transport and energy needs

The UK Energy Review and the development of a National Transport Strategy for Scotland are seeking to reconcile growing demand for travel with the need for new and more sustainable energy resources.

This year the annual STSG conference and AGM brings together leading experts in transport, energy and technology to debate what these changes mean for Scotland.

Scotland is leading the way with the zero emission fuel cell car trial on Unst, growing take-up of LPG cars and new more energy-efficient buses and freight vehicles. But as a peripheral country in Europe, Scotland is more reliant on air travel where alternatives to fossil fuels have yet to emerge.

The conference will provide an opportunity to debate how Scotland can continue to be an innovator in both transport and energy fields and provide a forum for stakeholders to explore collaboration opportunities.
